A Covered Landman.
(From Judge.)

I must confess with some distress,

I once detected sailing:
The rise and dip of any ship
Would set my heart a-quailing.

And yet of late, through chance or fate
Or some such vindred antic,
About the free and bright blue sea

I've grown to be romantic,

Though I aver I still prefer
The beach unto the bollow,
The ocean's wide and swaying tide.

Has come to haunt my pillow,
I dream of things like regalts wings

And boats that go gayotting,
And all through this—a winsome mae

Who's very fond of yachting, I'd brave the wave, the winds that rave,

If we might be together,
The skies might shoon, the tempests burn;

Twould all seem sunny weather.

Her charming siles, her roguish smiles,

I'm so completely wrapped in,
I'd fain share to be her mate.

And let her be the captain!
